Comic Opera Episodes In Austro-Serbian War

fed to these two guns, in order to do all possible damage in the fina! fusillade, and also to prevent the expecied Austrians from profiting by them. The Austrians, taken aback by this new heavy offensive and supposing that the Serbians had been extensively re-enforced, decided to evacuate Semilin. In consequence both Belgrade and Semilin were evacuated simultaneously, and the two armies were each a full day's march inland from their respective cities before the Austrians discovered the actual, state of affairs. Then they turned back and geve chase. It is highly probable that the subsequent failure of the Austrian offensive many weeks later was in no small part caused by the lack of a heavy offensive and immediate following up of the Serbians in the initial stages of the campaign.

BELGRADE, Serbla, Oct. 5.—In the however, these hopes were shattered when a great number of Austrian shells tertions of two six-inch French naval guns. When the Serblans decided to evacuate the city all remaining ammunition in the storehouses was speedily fed to these two guns, in order to do all possible damage in the final fugiliade, and also to prevent the expected

Expect To Get Semlin. Although the Serbian guns outweigh the Austrian guns in number and callber, the Serbian guns since the recap-ture of this city last winter have been directed almost entirely against the Austrian batteries and not the city of Semlin itself. The Serbs have followed this policy in the hope that they may soon come in possession of the Austrian city, as well as sufficient land soon come in possession of the Austrian city, as well as sufficient land behind it to serve as a protection for Belgrade. Under present conditions Belgrade will always be a shining target for the Austrians. Permanent fortifications of any kind are unknown, newly dug trenches and temporary battery locations in the hills being the sole defenses of approach.

While the French and English contingents here saved the city from utter destruction, their real military value unquestionably lies in the example which they have been to the Serbian army through the introduction of French and English methods of warfare. The Serb is a magnificent fighter, but his mode of fighting is far short of the modern European standard. The food, which is confined to black bread and soup, and those in limited quantity, is in no small part responsible for a lowered vitality and subsequent susceptibility to disease. A very considerable part of the typhus which has devastated their ranks has developed into fatal stages because of this lowered vitality. The American hospital here is filled with cases of amputated legs and arms that could have been saved through proper when a loud report is heard he probably will look up; if inside his store he will not walk to the door.

A daily occurrence is the purr of one or more aeroplanes above the city. They are usually those of French and Serbian scouting parties, but occasionally they are Austrians. Under any conditions their presence is taken as the made the cause of unaccustomed bear of the clays work and not to be made the cause of unaccustomed frequent the cafes, and altogether the aspect of the city is that of the light opera conception of a Baikan city. Until last week it was generally supposed that the bombardment of the cityl issue posed that the bombardment of the cityl section of the city, extending over many months, was over. The Austrian batteries had for some time been directed at the English and French batteries alone, so that people returning to their homes considered themselves in comparative safety. Last Thursday, that the loss through disease and enemy fire has not been infinitely greater.

The contrast here between Serbian and French military methods is inexpressibly great. The customary Serbian trench is but a mound of mud thrown up shoulder high, little system as to sanitation and general military efficiency being considered. The contrast may be found in a French trench near the site of the destroyed naval guns. Every inch of its course has been worked out with minute care as to drainage, comfort and general military advantage. Concrete storehouses for ammunition have been installed, and modern efficiency is apparent at every turn.

The Serbian aviation corps is negligible. The ten French machines here, however, have set an example, with the result that several aeroplanes consigned to Serbia are now on the docks at Salonica awaiting shipmit and an aviation corps of some standing is being developed.

Kansas State Banks Overrun With Money

TOPEKA, Kan., Oct. 5.—Kansas banks have actually overflowed with money this year. Never before in their history have deposits reached a point where the banks could not receive them without violating the law. Most of the banks have added to their surplus or capital accounts in order to permit the acceptance of additional deposits.

There is a provision of the Kansan law that no State bank be permitted to have deposits exceeding ten times the capital and surplus of the bank.
